National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
A band of rain, sleet and snow will move northwestwards across Scotland during today. Snow is most likely above 200 metres, although heavier rates could bring snow temporarily down to low levels at times, although accumulations of snow on roads below 200 metres will be limited during daylight hours.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 10:00 on Sat, 16th Mar 2013 until 23:55 on Sat, 16th Mar 2013

An area of rain, sleet and snow will move northwest across Scotland during Saturday. Some temporary accumulations of snow are possible on roads at low levels, but these should melt during daylight hours, whilst on ground above 200-300 m, 2-5 cm of snow is likely with 10 cm possible on higher level routes.

The rain. sleet and snow will clear from southern and eastern areas by early evening, with clear spells allowing surface temperatures to fall below zero leading to ice forming on untreated surfaces.

The public are advised to be aware of these wintry hazards, especially if driving on higher level roads.
